World Religions Respond to the Environmental Crisis

Mary Evelyn Tucker

Co-Director, Yale Forum for Religion and Ecology Senior Lecturer and Research Scholar, School of Forestry & Environmental Studies and the Divinity School, Yale University

Mary Evelyn Tucker is a leader in the emerging field of religion and ecology, having organized 10 conferences at Harvard on the world religions and the environment. Based at Yale, she has written or edited many books on this topic, most recently Ecology and Religion with co-author John Grim.

In this talk, Tucker will discuss the growing moral and religious arguments related to climate change and biodiversity. With publication of the Pope's encyclical on the environment, this movement is gaining momentum as a field in academia and a force in society.

Light Refreshments will be provided.

This event is co-sponsored by ASU Lightworks and the ASU School for the Future of Innovation in Society
